at a livery stable in Jacksonville. The grief-stricken wife sold the remaining ef-debts of the absent husband and at the only clew to his whereabouts being a letter

a short time another letter came, showing the husband was in the same locality. This postmasters at Woodson and here, with the result that the wife arrived this morning

AMUSEMENTS.

English's-West's Minstrels. "Billy" West has a minstrel show this season which any manager might be proud to own. An August engagement at a highclass theater is a risky venture, but even with midsummer weather there was a good crowd out last night and a good show for the crowd. West's new show is several points in advance of last year's attraction. His stage settings are on the extravaganza order and a more beautiful frame for the minstrel first part it would be hard to devise. The fancy costumes, delicate coloring and lights and the refined air about the entrance of the singers foreshadows the nature of the performance. The tone throughout is so much above the early-day minstrel show that orthodox church people might attend and not fall from grace. There is a collection of highly meritorious trained male singers in this company and they give the best selections, as well as the latest coon songs, making hits with Richard Jose, with powerful contra tenor, is featured and his rendition of "Time and Tide," with its "eternity" top note, was a veritable vocal sensation. Among the many sweet singers John Rodgers, the basso, made a hit hardly less pronounced than lose. Rodgers's bass notes are as melodlous as the tones of a great church organ. Such a musical voice, taken with his handdignified figure, should make him as creat a success in opera as Eugene Cowles. The solo singing was better than the ensemble work with the single exception of the "Intermezzo" number by a sextet at the close of the first part. This beautiful Mascagni selection was so strikingly effective that it received a double curtain call and had to be repeated. It was one of the few times when from top gallery to lower loor there have been calls for an encore classical number. In the comic songs ballads there were Ernest Tenney, with his parodies; Mr. Harle, with his "Little Drummer Boy;" Tom Lewis, with "My Hannah Lady," and Carroll Johnson, the swellest of them all, in "My Oriental Coon," a new and queer song with a barparian and original dance that was one of the best things of the evening. The vaudeville numbers were excellent in spots. Tommy Hayes, the musical trick bone soloist, accompanied by the full orchestra, layed the bones, wine glasses, knives and pieces of cigar boxes or anything he -not simply bone tattoos, but actual music -out of all of them. Following this comes greatest specialty of the evening, when Waterbury Brothers and Tenney introduce their musical act. This is a mixture of mirth and music, with so much panto me art and musical talent that it outranks anything of a similar nature ever brought here by the vaudeville companies. It is a show all by itself. The entertainment ends with Mr. West in what is always the proudest act of his life—a grand march. He wears a handsome uniform and gives a drill of the United States dismounted cay alry, assisted by the entire company.

ith all these excellent features there i no excuse for false representation, but the idvance notices advertised a big act with Billy" West in Colonel Roosevelt's unileading a company of Rough Riders in San Juan hill, which is not given. The next attraction at the Park is "The Heart of Chicago" for three days, followed by "Fogg's Ferry' next Thursday. "Fogg's Ferry" has not been played here for nearly ten years, it is believed, not since Lizzie Evans had it out, unless Florence Bisnop appeared here in it subsequently.

Miss Katherine Bloodgood has been engaged to take the place of Mme. Schumann-Heink at the Worcester Festival in September. Miss Bloodgood will sing selections from the Ortruda music of "Lohengrin," and in the first part of the concert will sing "O Mio Fernando," from "La Favorita."

The retirement from the stage of George Clarke the veteran actor, is the latest incident in theat rical affairs brought about by the death of Augustin Daly. Since Mr. Daly's death Mr. Clarke has had several offers from theatrical managers and has been asked to accept directorship of a of De Pauw class of '95, where they first dramatic school. Mr. Clarke, whose real name is O'Ne'l, that appeared in New York at Barnum's Museum, then at Broadway and Ann street, and fterward at the old Olympic. He next supported Edwin Forrest for several seasons. In 1869 he foined Augustin Daly's forces at the old Fifthavenue Theater, now the Medison-square, and remained with Daly until the latter's death.

The company now at the Park playing "A Yenuine Yentleman" has some long jumps ahead of it. To-night, immediately after the performance which closes its Indianapolis engagement, the company goes to East St. Louis for Sunday night. Leaving there on a special train at a o'clock Monday morning, it starts for St. Joseph arriving there about 5 o'clock Monday afternoor is due in Denver week after next and from there will go to the coast by rapid stages. Manager Aiston, who is guiding the fortunes of this company, has a still bigger production on his hands in "The Sorrows of Satan." It not only takes a very large company to put on this lastnamed play, but about twice as much scenery as used in "A Yenuine Yentleman," which is itself a scenic production of no mean order.

When the lady had recovered her senses however, and beheld the wreck of her hat, newly purchased only the previous day, her indignation became violent. She rushed out of the drug store, in search of the owner of the cart and the hungry horse, and found the former within a neighboring winehouse, and the latter outside. Mr. Bryan is not a "bimetallist," as laims, but a silver monometallist. In the platform which he put forth at Omaha as he expression of his views Mr. Bryan insists more strenuously than ever upon what the Chicago platform demanded: "Free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1 without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation." And his platform declares this to be "the natural and necessary ratio." Why "natural?" It is not the commercial ratio which Jefferson said should always govern. It is a ratio fixed by law when it represented substantially the relative value of the two money metals-a legal recogni-

Why "necessary?" This country has had three ratios-15, 15½ and 16. Other countries have had different ratios. Why is "16 to 1" selected as peculiarly binding-as sacred as the divine code, as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians? The truth is, as we have said, that in taking this position Mr. Bryan stamps himself as a silver monometallist, and if he were wholly honest he would admit it. He has read history enough to know that nevernever!-NEVER!-in this country or in any other have gold and silver circulated side by side-giving practical bimetallism-when both were coined freely and without limitation at 16 to 1 or any other false ratio. Special to the Indianapolis Journal. CLINTON, Ind., Aug. 25 .- Several months ago a man calling himself John A. Kuykendall visited the farmers north of this city and proposed to give them all a chance to get rich. He claimed to be administrator | the husband started to Jacksonville with a of an estate left by Charles A. Durkee, once Governor of the Territory of Utah. He said that in 1864 C. P. Huntington and other capitalists furnished Durkee funds to buy the entire issue of first-mortgage bonds of the Pacific Railroad, amounting to $64,-000,000; and, as they did not wish to be Miss Edna Kuhn has returned from a visit known in the deal the bonds were purchased in Durkee's name. Durkee deposited the bonds in the United States treasury and soon afterward he died suddenly, the property reverting to his estate. They have lain they amount to $265,000,000. Kuykendall represented himself as administrator of Durkee's estate, and was pushing proceedings to recover the bonds from the treasury. In order to raise money to prosecute his case in the Court of Claims he was selling "certificates of indebtedness" against the estate. He had beautifully-engraved certificates, which he sold for 1 cent on the dollar. For $10 he would sell a certificate calling for $1,000 as soon as his claim was allowed, and proportionate amounts for larger sums. He worked quietly among the farmers and disposed of an immense quantity of his stuff. He assured the buyers "upon his honor" the certificates would be paid off not later than six months from date, He told so plausible a tale that many intelligent people were deceived. Editor Fred Trillingham, of the Clinton Republican, heard of Kuykendall's work and arranged a meeting with him in the guise of a Clinton miner, who wanted to invest. They met at the home of one of the victims, north of the city. TIPTON, Ind., Aug. 25.—One of the most interesting reunions ever held in this county assembled in the Independence neighborhood yesterday, four miles west of this city. It was the fortieth anniversary of the building of the Independence schoolhouse. In 1859 the citizens of this locality built a schoolhouse independent of the township trustee, and the influence of the early educational sentiment that prevailed has made this one of the most remarkable neighborhoods in this county. A. G. Burkhardt spoke for the class of the sixties, Judge W. W. Mount spoke for the class of the seven-ties, Hon. Lee Nash for the class of the eighties and Miss Winona Hulick for the class of the nineties. Out of these classes four went to the war for the Union, one being killed at Champion Hills, two died and one now lives in Kansas. Thirty of the number became school teachers, two preachers, five lawyers, one judge of the Circuit Court, one traveling auditor of a railroad company, two doctors, nine have been elected to county offices in this and other counties, one captain of a company in the late Spanish-American war and others in various professional and industrial occupations. The members of the four periods own more than 4,000 acres of land; they are estimated to be worth more than $300,000, and nine-tenths of them vote the Repub lican ticket. Not one man was ever charged or convicted with crime, nor a single one ever fell a victim of the vices to which man is heir to. MORE FARCIAL.

(Concluded from First Page.) Mercier, General De Boisdeffre and General Gonse. M. Gobert asserted that the handwriting of the bordereau was natural and fluent, but that it was almost illegible, whereas Dreyfus, even when writing rapidly, always wrote most legibly. The witness asked General Gonse if ar envelope accompanied the bordereau as he, M. Gobert, wished to see what the writer's careful caligraph was like, explaining that the address of a letter is always in a firmer hand than its contents. General Gonse refused the request on the ground that the witness must not know the name of the addressee. The general also re-fused to allow the bordereau to be photographed, alleging that if the War Office photographers were allowed to photograph it all Paris would be acquainted with the bordereau the next day. [Laughter.] Thereupon the witness remarked:

Gonse, this is a very interesting confession." M. Gobert then suggested that the work be intrusted to the prefecture of police, where M. Bertillon is the photographer. Until then, the witness also said he never heard of M. Bertillon as a handwriting expert, saying he to be favorable to the prisoner. If the debecame an expert for this special occasion, when he was called in the War Office. [Laughter.]

General Gonse, it appears from the testimony, was greatly enraged when he learned of the result of M. Gobert's examination of the bordereau and visited the expert repeatedly. The latter always insisted on learning the name of the suspect. "It was not proper,' said M. Gobert, "for me to accuse anyone without being perfectly cognizant of the facts, especially in circumstances of so grave a nature. [Sensation.] I would not accuse any one anonymously, for to do so would be contrary to the law." Amidst laughter in court the witness described how, from an examination of an official report on Dreyfus, from which Dreyfus's name had been removed, M. Gobert had the malicious satisfaction of telling Gen. Gonse the name of the officer they wanted to arrest. It was after M. Gobert had refused to incriminate Dreyfus that M. Bertillon was, intrusted with the examination of the bordereau and after a few hours' study M. Bertillon positively attributed the bordereau to Dreyfus. From that time forward M. Gobert heard no more of the Dreyfus case. He was not asked to submit a report, but described to the then minister of justice, M. Guerin, the circumstances in the case. "M. Guerin," continued the witness, "intimated that these were soldiers' affairs which did not concern him as chief of the civil judi-ESTERHAZY'S WORK. Colonel Jouaust asked M. Gobert for more definite criticism of the bordereau, and the witness replied that he noticed certain similarities between the handrwiting of the bordereau and that of Dreyfus, but, he added, there were many important differ ences which proved to him that Dreyfus was not the author of the bordereau, and his opinion had since been confirmed "because it was now proved that the bordereau was the work of Esterhazy." [Sensation.] Replying to the court, M. Gobert suggested that the judges compare the bordereau with a letter admitted to be in Esterhazy's handwriting, and dated from Rouen, Aug. 17, 1894, and with documents written by the prisoner. "You will then unmistakably recognize," M. Gobert added, "that the bordereau is in Esterhazy's handwriting and not in the handwriting of Dreyfus." [Great sensation.1 The witness, at this juncture, identified the bordereau as the same which was sub mitted to him, and he proceeded to poin out the identity of letters therein with let ters in documents admittedly written by Esterhazy, saying that, while the resemblance was not apparent in Dreyfus's hand-writing, in Esterhazy's there were marked peculiarities of punctuation and the manner of beginning lines which were also noticein the bordereau, but which were not found in the prisoner's caligraphy. Proceeding, the witness traversed the ol ground of the peculiarities of the tracing paper, which it is known Esterhazy used, and said the date of the bordereau must be July 24, 1894. The expert refused, in reply to a question by the court, to admit that the bordereas was written in a disguised hand. He said it had been written with great rapidity, pre-cluding all idea of doctoring or tracing. General Gonse asked permission to question M. Gobert, and said

"In what army list did you look for the M. Gobert-I used the list which is ge erally kept in business The general pointed out that the list did not give the information claimed by M. Gobert, but the latter maintained that he had stated nothing but the pure and simple truth. General Gonse, having alluded to certain undesirable acquaintances formed by M. Go-bert, the latter replied, amid a sensation in court: "I emphatically protest against the insinuations of General Gonse. There is not a single word of truth in what he says.' There was a further dispute between General Gonse and M. Gobert over circumstances in connection with the latter's examination of the bordereau. M. Gobert said that Colonel D'Aboville was present, but the colonel promptly advanced and said he had never seen M. Gobert before to-day, adding: "If M. Gobert's other recollections are as exact as these, the court will draw its own conclusions." [Murmurs of disapproval.] Dreyfus here declared, in the most positive manner, that he had never been at the Bank of France, where M. Gobert was employed, or had relations with any one there The prisoner asserted that his sole desir was to know the truth. He admitted he had been engaged in various financial opera-tions, but said he had never asked either for written or verbal information from the Bank of France.

BERTILLON'S TESTIMONY. There was a general movement of curiosity when M. Bertillon, the well-known an thropometer (or specialist in the measure ment of the human body) was called, and the interest deepened when the chief of the stance, sugar was 60 cents per pound, lard | Identification Department advanced to the witness bar He was soon afterward foilowed by four soldiers and a noncommissioned officer bearing portfolios, drawing boards, and a variety of packages and paraaernalia, which were deposited on the platform to the amusement of the audience. M. Bertillon prefaced his evidence by saying his explanations would be understood only by a very limited number, and therethe men were starving, having eaten nothing for three days. No game whatever was refer to documents which he had brought in order to make his evidence more intelligi [Laughter.] The specialist then unpacked packages of photographs, plans, etc. and another table was brought in to hold cared for and transported to Seattle at the mass of papers produced. In monotonous tones M. Bertillon proceed ed in the manner of a school boy reciting a lesson, to demonstrate technically how h reached the conviction of Dreyfus's guilt reciting the facts published April 22. He said he proposed to prove to the court: First, that the bordereau was a doctored document; second, that it could only have been manufactured by the prisoner; third that it had been written in a free hand by means of a key word placed beneath the tracing paper in such a way as to be quite The witness, centinuing, declared Dreyfus did not have recourse to imitating Esterhazy's free handwriting because quired too long to study, and he used the tracing process because it is easier to learn and more likely to be successful. With the view of illustrating his meaning, M. Bertil-lon handed around photographs of the bordereau, etc. During the course of the demonstration the specialist advanced to the judges' bench, and with his finger pointed out illustrations of his theories. M. Demange and Labori, the juages and others gathered in a group around M. Bertillon. Dreyfus appeared to be stupefied by the incomprehensible jargon, and many of the audience left the court. Suddenly the wondering attention of those remaining in the hall was riveted by the cryptographic re-mark enunciated by M. Bertillon in loud tones: "We clearly have before us a fabricated document. The one word always rests upon another with a divergence of 1.25 millmeters and 2.25 millimeters. That is a phenomenon which is unnatural." M. Labori watched the specialist for ew moments and then returned to his seat, holding up both hands and exclaiming: "It is most extraordinary.

M. Bertillon continued the explanations and caused such a whirl in the brains of his hearers that Col. Jouaust finally remarked: 'We must have a few minutes rest."

SAYS DREYFUS IS GUILTY. When the session of the court resumed M. Bertillon made further demonstrations. He compared words of the bordereau with words in the document of comparison, Leaning on the judges' bench he placed the entire bordereau over a graphic canvas and proceeded to show that by so doing Dreyfus succeeded in formulating the principal rules which served to guide him in making his joining marks, remarking that any copyist possessing a key to these rules could 1:3 learn to replace the entire bordereau. The witness, continuing, proceeded to demonstrate the practicability of this. "Where persons are accused," he said, "it is not sufficient to meet the charge with denials, but it is necessary to prove that they have not done what they are charged with. In this case the handwriting was disguised. There is, therefore, presumptive proof that subjects from which students may select the prisoner is guilty."
their work than any other school.

After this M. Bertillon pointed out that by Major D'Ormes-Cheville. The major explained that he wished my personal op on cryptographic methods, sympathetic inks. etc., which might help the family of Dreyfus in corresponding with him. The request was partly due to the fact that a number of letters addressed to the prisoner by his family had been received by the officials. During the course of the interview Major D'Ormes-Cheville produced one of those ters. I had hardly cast my eye on it when was astounded to notice the same kind of negative 'o' with which I had been so struck before. It was in a letter from Madame Dreyfus." The specialist then pointed out how he found the same peculiarities of Dreyfus's handwriting in the letters of other members of his family and proceeded to give a long and perfectly unintelligible exposition, designed to demonstrate that this proved the guilt of the prisoner.

The audience, quite in the dark regarding the meaning of the technicalities, punctu-ated the queer expressions of the anthropometer with peals of laughter. The members of the court-martial evidently tried hard to understand, while Dreyfus appeared fatigued, but endeavored to follow

"My theory," continued the witness, "was in 1884 considered by the Ministry of War fense accepted it, they said, the long magisterial investigation would have to be recommenced, and so [here the witness raised his voice and struck the table with his fist], when the word 'grille' (perforated card used for ciphers) was uttered at the courtmartial of 1894, the prisoner's face con-tracted. When I spoke of the fabrication of the bordereau he exclaimed: wretch! He saw me write them.' I did not hear the remark, but when it was repeated to me it was a revelation, for, if innocent, the word 'fabrication' would have delighted instead of frightened him."

Dreyfus listened impassively to this tirade. The audience again became animated when M. Bertillon announced that he would give a practical demonstration of how the bordereau was fabricated by means of key word. The witness, seated at a table, began to copy the bordereau on a sheet of paper similar in character to the famous

After a quarter of an hour Colonel Jouaust suggested that it was not necessary to finish the demonstration, and M. Bertillon rose and showed the judges the result of his labor, remarking: "I was in a bad position." The audience concluded from this remark that this experiment had not succeeded, and the expression of the judges' faces seemed to bear out this opinion. The court adjourned for the day at 11:45 a. m. At the close of the proceedings quite a crowd of people surrounded M. Labori, anxious to know his opinion of M. Bertillon's imitation bordereau. The lawyer answered that so far as he could judge by a hurried glance it certainly had a resemblance to the original, but by no means an identity with the document. "But," he added, "M. Bertillon only did what degens could do. It only proves he is a clever forger. That is all."

Germany's Emperor Does Not Leave His Papers Lying Around Loose. BERLIN, Aug. 25.-The correspondent here of the Associated Press was informed to-day at the court marshal's office that the statement made on the witness stand at Rennes yesterday by M. Mortian de Muller, a friend of M. Beaurepaire, the former judge of the civil section of the Court of Cassation, that he had seen a newspaper, the Libre Parole, bearing a postage stamp in Emperor William's bedroom at Potsdam, and that on the paper were certain words in German, meaning, "Dreyfus has been arrested," could not possibly be true. It was pointed out that his Majesty invariably puts his desk in order before leaving his room and that nothing is left lying around or open, but if he should fail to do so, it is the duty of his valet to put things away. Besides it was also said the Emperor does not read whole newspapers, but only marked clippings which later are incorporated in
